

D* broke into tears at the dinner table. In tears the whole time.

Dad> sit down, now what is this about like and love, can you explain this?

D*> She said that you have to love a person if like a person.

Dad> She said that?

D*> Yeah.

Dad> Did you tell her that you liked her? What happened?

D*> We were in the living room and she told, she asked Jay that question, and he didn't say anything.

Dad> What question?

D*> Do .. why should I love him if he .. why should ... why should .. why should you love me ... I mean .. why should D* love ... I can't say it! Just can't.

Dad> that is ok D* just sit down, take your time, take a deep breath

D*> She said why should I love D* if D* doesn't love me?

Dad> And why does she think you don't love her?

D*> I told her that.

Dad> You did?

D*> Yes.

Dad> ah, what were your exact words?

D*> I love you but I don't like you.

Dad> ah, so what happened after you told you that?

D*> That was a few weeks ago, and I think I told it that week and

Dad> how did she react after you told her that?

D*> same question

Dad> What question is that?

D*> Why should I love you if you don't love me?

Dad> but you said you loved her, you just said you didn't like her

D*> No I meant the opposite.

Dad> You like her but you don't love her.

D*> No the opposite.

Dad> You love her, but you don't like her?

D*> yes!

Dad> So you told her that you loved her, you just didn't like her?

D*> yes.

Dad> so what is happening now?

D*> she made it so , like I

Dad> stop playing with that stuff push it out of the way

D* she made so like so I like, made me so I say that. I said. She got me to actually say a few weeks after that. Ah ah ... "I like you."

Dad> So she forced you to say that you liked her?

D*> Something like that, not exactly force, but made me want to. Like, she kept saying it and saying it. More like you won't get out of this. She won't let me.

Dad> push the stuff out of the way. You started saying you won't get out.

D*> She said you are going to answer me. And then I after a while I answered her.

And , and I answered her that I like her because she would eventually ask that question again and again.

Dad> What did she say you weren't going to get out of?

D*> That was mistake. I shouldn't have said it. I wasn't .. that was not really happen. I actually said that.

Dad> what didn't really happen.

D*> that thing I said about you not getting out of it.
